WILD With Eczema

I was a sufferer for eight years from Eczema, but now am entirely cured. The palms of my hands were covered and badly inflamed; little white blisters appeared, then would peel off, leaving a red, amooth surface, which would burn like fire and itch. On the luside of the upper part of my limbs, great red blotches would appear, and as soon as I became warm, the burning and itching would begin. Night after night I would lie awake and scratch, and almost go wild. I got a box of Cuticura, and a botte of Cuticura its. Solvent, and after a few applications I noticed the redness and inflammation disappear; before I had used one bor there was not a sign of Eczema left. I can trutfully assert that $2.00 worth of Cuticura Expected cured me.

NEW GIFTS AND PURCHASES FOR THE METROPOLITAN MUSEUM.

IMPROVED ACCOMMODATIONS-THE RESTAURANT AND A CHECKROOM FOR WHEELMEN-

OPENING RECEPTION TO-MOR-

Important additions have been made to the exhibits of paintings, pott ry, musical instruments and sculptural reproductions in the Metropolitan Museum of Art within the last f. w days. The nature of these additions has been withheld from public announcement in deference to the desire of trustees that the first view of the new collections be announced tomorrow night, when the opening reception will be held. Last evening a violation of these instructions appeared which has excited strong condemnation. and official action may be taken to-day at the busi-ness meeting in the Museum to find out the manner in which confidence was betrayed.

Of the three new paintings in the Catherine Lorillard Wolfe collection, to which special interest is directed, "Lachrymae," by Sir Frederick Leighton, was exhibited at the Royal Academy last year and purchased this month by the Museum with the fund equeathed by Miss Wolfe.

Hurrah for the Good Ship Erebus" is a Turner added to the Museum collection. It shows a ship in a cloud of misty spray, the foam lashed from waves by a monster whale in the throes of death, his blood turning the water to crimson, and one of the several boats overturned in the tury of the animal's movements. This painting was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1845, and a year later purchased by Dr. Munro, of Novar, who was one of the earliest patrons of Turner. The painting later passed into the hands of Sir Francis Seymour Hayden, and from him it was acquired for the Metropolitan Museum.

Edge of the Woods," by Theodore Rousseau, casures forty-cight by thirty-one inches on panel, and was purchased for $25,200 at the William Schaus sale last February. It is a landscape showing the smiling aspect of nature, with the cool, inviting shade of the wood, the white clouds drifting over the shade of the wood, the white clouds drifting over the sky and a path traversing the greensward and disappearing in the shadows of the forest.

George A. Hearn has contributed several additions to the art gaileries, one a portrait of a woman by John Hoppner, of the Royal Academy, who died early in the present century. "Mrs. Reid as a Sultana," by Robert Edge Pine, a painter of the last century, is another of Mr. Hearn's gifts, and a third is "Lady Mary Berkeley," by Sir Godfrey Knella, who was born in 1646 and died in 1723. Arthur H. Hearn, son of George A. Hearn, has presented the portrait of William Forsyth, by Sir Henry Raeburn, R. A., who died in 1833.

A surprise in store for those at the opening of the Museum this week, after the fortnight of rearranging and enlarging, is the new collection of rare musical instruments in the J. Crosby Brown gailery. In the department of potteries there are interesting additions of Etruscan vases and other objects; and in the new wing the masterpieces of Michael Angelo and other sculptors are reproduced in imposing beauty.

MISS CLARA BARTON'S APPEAL.

PARTIES OF PHYSICIANS SENT TO THE SUFFERING ARMENIANS-FOOD AND MEDICINE NEEDED.

Dr. A. M. Lesser, executive surgeon of the Red spital in this city, has received a letter Society, who is now in Turkey, in which she speaks of the contagious diseases now epidemic in Armenia. They are at Zeitoun, Marash and in the terior of Anatolia. The first news of the trouble came to Sir Philip Currie, British Ambassador to Turkey, who re-ceived his information through the assemblage of oreign consuls at Zeltoun. Sir Philip begged Miss Barton to try to reach the suffering people with help. Miss Barton immediately asked for permishelp. Miss Barton immediately asked for permission and protection from the authorities, both of which were granted to the Red Cross Society only. Miss Barton then engaged with difficulty, from the medical college at Beyroot, Syria, eight physicians and druggists, and also telegraphed for medicine and medical supplies. An American physician, Dr. Ira Harris, volunteered to take charge of the party, and they have gone into the field at Zeitoun. Their travels are much impeded by the mountainous roads, which are covered with snow. Dr. Hubbell is in charge of another expedition at Marash. He has sean word to Miss Barton that there were 3.000 sick at Zeitoun, and in the village, and only one doctor there. Miss Barton that there were at once, and asks for instructions from the executive surgeon of the Red Cross Society.

Copies of Miss Barton's letter containing her appeal have been sent throughout the country. Several firms have already responded with goods, which will be shipped to her immediately.

It is announced that the land will be deeded to the Heine Monument Association. The memorial will have a wooded background, and will be visible from Glen Island and from the Sound. All the nurchase money for the fountain has been raised, but the work of erecting the memorial will not be completed for a year at least.

CHARLES PFIZER, JR., BADLY HURT.

THROWN FROM A HORSE IN LONDON WHEN HE WAS NEARLY READY TO RETURN TO THIS CITY-HIS RECOVERY EXPECTED.

Private dispatches, which were received in this city several days ago, gave the information that a serious accident had happened to Charles Pfizer, jr., the junior member of the drug firm of George Pfizer & Co., at No. 81 Maiden Lane. Young Mr. Pfizer went to Europe three months ago on a trip which business and pleasure were combined. On the day before he expected to leave London to return to this city he was out riding, and was thrown from his horse at Hyde Park Corner, the spot at which Mahlon Sands was killed by a similar accident. Mr. Pfizer received a serious concussion of the brain, but after his removal to the Albemarie Hotel he was reported to be recovering. He had been insensible for five days before his condition was hopeful. Young Mr. Pfizer has been known as a good rider and dr.ver. For some years he was the president of the Tandem Club. He has hunted over rough country, and has played polo and has been an expert horseman for years. Reports of the accident in London indicate that his horse slipped and fell. I happened to get hold of a periodical paper in which it was stated that through your help and assistance women with no means had been made happy for life. Being poor, very poor, and for a long time having the heartfelt wish to come to America, but lacking means, I appeal to your great kindness and ask you that you will show me the same kindness which you have shown to many others and help me to gain a support for the future. I am the widow of an official, no children, Catholic, born in Linz, in upper Austria, thi-ty-two years old, plump figure, dark blond hair, blue eyes, sound, white, natural teeth. As I came from a professor's family, my education was such as to enable me to pass in the best of society. I was educated in a ladies' institute and speak French and German. French grammatically only, as I had no opportunity to converse in French. I greatly love music and also sing and play the plano will. Staying with my relatives, I seek a position as housekeeper or governess to children without a mother, with a view to matrimony, as I fear for old age, and must try to be taken care of, Inclosed two photographs. I have at present no other pleture. A celebrated Viennese painter, well known by us, asked for the privilege of painting my bust, which is the cause of these pictures. Repeating my prayer once more, I ask you to let me benefit by your kindness, for it lays in your hands to make a being happy, and you may be assured that I will be grateful to you all my life. ### TUBULAR CHIMES ON EXHIBITION

Those who are interested in music and musical in struments should not fail to visit this week the well-known jewelry establishment of Theodore B. Starr, No. 206 Fifth-ave. On exhibition there are chimes, which will be a novelty to most people, To-day, and on Friday and Saturday, Mr. Staples, of England, a graduate of the Winchester Ringing Guild, will be present to illustrate the method of playing upon the chimes, and to explain their prin-ciples to visitors.

The tones which are produced from the chimes are remarkably sweet, and, especially in the case of the large sizes, penetrating and powerful. The largest instrument shown has fifteen tubes, or bells, as they are called, each two inches in diameter. of a framework which stands upright on the floor. They vary in length from four or five to seven feet, the higher notes being made upon the shorter tubes. The particular instrument shown is in the key of A flat, in the diatonic scale. In front of the top of each tube is the hammer with which it is struck. Cords suspended from these hammers enable the player to operate them. In the smaller instruments, intended to hang on the wall, the playing is done with a hammer held in the wall, the playing is done with a hammer held in the hand. It is said that any one able to read music at all would have no difficulty in learning to ring these chimes. The small sizes are especially adapted for private music-rooms, for opera houses and for theatres. They have also been used with remarkably good effect in churches, being placed in the sacristy and played during the processional hymn. The material of the bells is a brass composition, and they range from three-quarters of an inch to four and one-half inches in diameter.

SOME NEW FRENCH GOWNS-SKIRTS, SLEEVES, COLLARS AND CAPES.

The exquisitely pretty gowns worn by Mesdames Rejane, Rosa Bruck and Sorei in the new play at the Paris Vaudeville will serve as admirable crialready been said in these columns, the French stage is, in lieu of a French court, the exponent of the fashions. Mme. Réjane's feminine admirers in country will perhaps be pleased to learn what are the very latest costumes worn by their favorite. In the first and second act she wears a demi-toilette of great elegance made of rose-colored faille, trimmed all over the skirt and bodice with a long running design of white lace appliqued on the silk. The dress is cut en princesse, the bodice cut out in deep square in front, and a deep V in the back, and gathered slightly on the shoulders, showing and gathered signify on the edges of a smoothly fitting, tight under bodice of black satin which has no trimming, nor has the tion, is inclined to think that a matrimonial bureau | draped bodice of rose faille, except the applications of white lace already mentioned and a ruche of black tulle across the front of the square neck. The front of the bodice has no belt, being part of the skirt, princess-fashion; but the back has a very chic arrangement consisting of a black satin rib bon fastened under the right arm and brought of Dr. Teese, and Martin said he would like to try shoulders is a collet of white mousseline de sole and lace, fastened at the neck by a draped collar of the velvet, which is finished at the top by a frill of lace. The sleeves are like those of Mile. Sorel, showing the shape of the arm to the shoulder, but draped in a sort of hood on the top.

Save for the change in sleeves, which after all is more of a modification than a change, there seems to be no extraordinary difference in the fashions this spring. The skirts are substantially the same, with rather more fulness at the back and a tendency toward the bustle effect. The attempt to introduce drapery will apparently not be successful. Jackets flare more than ever over the hips, and are very tight around the waist. As to the collars they trim them more than ever with ruches of tulle and lace, some of the arrangements amounting to veritable ruffs. In the way of colors the pre-dilection so far seems to be for the various shades of violet, mauve, green and gray—all particularly appropriate for spring and early summer. White will also be in great favor this summer; and black and white bids fair to be as popular as ever. For evening gowns very pale tints will replace the brilliant colors worn this winter, although there is a new rose color called "rose vif" which is Intensely pink. Sleeves for summer gowns should either be decidedly short, coming only to the elbow, or should be very long indeed, extending over the hand in a moyen age cuff. If short puff sleeves are worn, the gloves must be long enough to wrinkle and connect with the sleeves, the smallest gap between them showing the skin being considered bad form. Short capes this summer will be worn more than ever, and they are even wider and shorter, short enough to show the waist, and made to look even wider by the deep ruches of lace with which many are trimmed.

HE TRIES EXPERIMENTS FOR MR. ROUSS.

A POOR MAN SUFFERS AGONY AFTER BEING TREATED FOR PARTIAL BLINDNESS . BY A QUACK.

Charles Broadway Rouss, the wealthy Broadway merchant, has been suffering from partial blind-ness for two years, and several eminent surgeons have been unable to aid him and have said that he might expect to become totally blind. A number might expect to become totally as the might expect to be might expect At another time he submitted to an unusually severe shock of electricity. Thousands of alleged cures for blindness have been called to his attention by quacks, and he has experimented with some of John Martin, a poor man, who was nearly blind for nine years, has been befriended by Mr. Rouss and has been allowed to try some experiments at Mr. Rouss's expense. The latest experiment was so serious in its character that it nearly killed Martin. A quack, who had introduced himself as Dr. Teese, offered to make an improvement in the vision of Mr. Rouss for $100. He said he had a machine by means of which a great number of small blisters might be raised on the skin. The inflammation caused in that way, he said, strengthen the optic nerve and restore the sight.

Mr. Rouss talked with Martin about the method

The second and last costume worn by Réjane in the third act is of charming simplicity, but a simplicity that is really the highest art. It is of silver gray mohair, the skirt perfectly plain and the waist draped in biblike folds from shoulder to shoulder, each fold growing deeper until the point of the last folds, although apparently loose, follow the figure and are not in the least bulky; the sleeves are tight fitting and wrinkled from shoulder to wrist, and over the top from the shoulder to the cibow is a loop of the mohair arranged in pleats and forming a sort of hood. A violet satin ribben collar with coques on either side, and a large bunch of Parma violets on the right side of the bodice finish the

A particularly pretty gown is worn by Agnes Sorel in the first act. It is of a biscult-colored bengaline, with shoulders cut in a point over the draped uppers of the sleeves. The bodice is cut open over a vest of white satin, and simulates a jacket with the edges of the opening trimmed with a plissee of white chiffon, and embroidered with large flowers in silver paillettes. A flower on each hip below the white satin belt helps to carry out the jacket effect, and a large bouquet de corsage of pansles gives a touch of brightness to the costume which makes it to pay $199 to the "doctor" if the experiment was essful in the case of Martin.

"A blind man will catch at anything that he thinks will restore his sight," said Mr. Rouss yesterday to a Tribune reporter in explaining this arrangement, "and I thought if the experiment heiped Martin it might help me."

Martin's mother lives in the rear tenement-house at No. 192 Elizabeth-st, and there the "doctor" tried the experiment. He had a leathern cup from which a bunch of needle points darted every time the cup was squeezed. Martin took off his clothes and the "doctor" proceeded to use the terrible machine of torture until thousands of needle pricks in the cup was squeezed. Martin's flesh was so much lacerated that he was kept in bed for ten days. He suffered intense was purchased by New-York parties and regrets, but there was no improvement in his sight. The "doctor" then unfolded his plan. He said he did not expect that the experiment would make any improvement in Martin's vision, but he wanted to get money out of Mr. Rouss. "Go and tell Mr. Rouss hat you can see much better," he said, "and then I will get the $109 and divide with you. Then we will work between us and get more out of him."

Martin told the quack to go about his business. Then he went and told Mr. Rouss of the fraud.

All the exercises were under the guid-ance of the general director and instructor, Mrs. Margaret Stanton Lawrence, and Miss Mary Seward and James Jardine, 'instructors. By 1:30 p. m., when the exhibition began, the sides of the gymnasium were lined with spectators. Those not in the front rows were so anxious to see that most of them pre-ferred standing on their chairs to sitting in them. The room was decorated with the American colors, and a plane in one corner furnished the music to the movements were executed. No. 1 on the programme consisted of a graceful scarf drill and Indian club exercises by the girls of the High School. They wore, as did all the girls in the exhibition, the regulation gymnasium costume of dark blue blouse and divided skirt, which reached to the knees. Following this class came the college girls, who gave specimens of free work, movements with poles and fancy steps. The manual training boys made their first appearance in setting-up exercises and work with iron dumb-bells. "London balls," as the next performance of the manual train-ing and High School girls was called, was an un-usually pretty series of movements in tossing. bounding and catching small rubber balls. At its close one especially proficient young girl gave an exhibition which proved her skill at the game. Before leaving the floor the same class performed fancy marches and tig steps which pleased the spectators greatly. The school fencing, with wands, by the girls and boys together, showed how carefully they had been trained in the motions of attack and defence. A drill with wands by the boys brought out to advantage the hardened muscles of their

out to advantage the hardened muscles of their bared arms.

The next number differed considerably from anything that had gone before. It was called "double postures," and consisted of Delsarte positions representing the various emotions. These were assumed by the girls in couples, after the example of Mrs. Lawrence and Miss Seward, who stood at the end of the room. After short exercises with wooden dumb-belis by the High School boys, the general heavy work by boys and girls on the vaulting-horse and parallel bars was announced. The difficult feats when placed lengthwise were heartily applauded, and the antics of the few who found trouble in getting over caused much merriment. At the same time the girls were acquisiting themselves skilfully on the bars and receiving their share of attention. The forming of pyramids and some lively tumbling by the young gymnasts closed the exhibition, which reflected a great deal of credit upon both the teachers and pupils at the college.
